

Opportunity to obtain continuing education (CME/CNE/CE) credits

Dear Preceptors,

Thank you for your contributions to the mission of the Johns Hopkins School of Nursing through your service as a preceptor for our students. In recognition of your contributions, we are offering an opportunity to access online interactive continuing education courses on palliative care. Palliative care concepts, such as pain and symptom management, and treatment decision-making are crucial aspects of everyday clinical practice.

As part of our educational research study, you can receive access to online, interactive self-study modules with CME/CNE/CE (including pharmacological) credits offered by the Center to Advance Palliative Care (CAPC). Most modules can be completed in 35-65 minutes. CAPC modules and associated credits on a wide variety of topics can be reviewed at this link:

<https://www.capc.org/training/>.

To participate in this research study and access these CE modules, please complete the 5-minute survey at Palliative care survey

Or copy and paste the URL below into your internet browser.

Once you have completed the survey, you will receive an invitation from noreply@capc.org to create your individual user account needed to access the modules. You will enjoy a 3-month subscription to complete as many modules as you like. To maximize this opportunity, we suggest that you complete 3–4 modules each month. At the end of your subscription, we request you complete a brief post-CE training survey.

Your participation is completely voluntary and your decision whether or not to participate in this study will not affect your employment or training status.

We are excited to offer this continuing educational opportunity to our valued preceptors and to improve care of patients across the continuum. Please contact Dr. Binu Koirala, Project Coordinator, at bkoiral1@jhu.edu with any questions that you might have.

Best Regards,
